Heroes of flight

Orville and Wilbur Wright are often called the fathers of aviation. They invented, built and flew the first planes in 1903. It's very difficult to agree which flight was the first successful one, but it definitely happened in December of that year.

In 1909, The Daily Mail offered a prize for flying over the English Channel. The winner of the £1000 was Louis Bleriot, who achieved this in his monoplane. He was an enthusiast, engineer and constructor of planes.

Charles Lindbergh was the first man who flew solo from North America to Europe without stopping on the way. He set off on 20 May 1927, and after over thirty-three hours he landed in Paris. Everyone was so impressed that the Americans organized a huge parade for him in New York.

Amelia Earhart was the first woman to fly solo across the Atlantic. When she was only 34, on 20 May 1932, she flew from Newfoundland to Ireland. In 1937, she set off to fly around the Earth, but somewhere over the Pacific she lost radio contact and nobody ever saw her again.
